PENELOPE'S PROGRESS

IT was with misgiving that Penelope Brekenridge, sole representative of a long and illustrious line of staid Bostonians, thought of the prospect of living in the Midwest. It made her "blueblood" run cold to face the fact that the family fortunes were deplete and that she would have to accept the help of her father's brother, a man she had never seen but was sure must be uncivilized. With a deep sigh, she folded her four navy blue uniforms from the very proper Chesterfield School for Girls and put them away in the closet.

Things weren't much happier at the other end of this arrangement. Bob and Nancy gave each other long, meaningful looks across the breakfast table, fearful that the new member of their family might not fit into her new surroundings too well. Bob jammed his fork in a stack of pancakes and prepared to make his last loud protest.

"Gee, she probably won't like us any better than we'll like her. I just don't dig it, honest, Dad! Isn't there any place else she could go—to Mars maybe?"

"No, and I don't want to hear any more discussion about it. Although Penelope has been accustomed to an entirely different kind of life from ours, I'm sure she's a lovely girl and we'll all grow to love her as though she had always been a member of this household," John Brekenridge replied firmly.

"Yeah," Nancy mumbled. "I can just imagine." Then in a high falsetto with puckered lips and English accent, she turned to her brother. "How'dyoudo," she said elegantly, offering him the tips of her fingers.

"Cha'med, I'm sure," he said, kissing her hand with cavalier flourish. Using his teaspoon as a monocle, he looked down his nose at his sister. "Did I understand you to say your pater had only four million? Unthinkable!"

"Ah, but my dear Robert, remember the Maine! We do have tradition!"

"Yes, yes, the Maine. I had quite forgot the old battle," Bob reminisced.

"All right, you two, that's enough nonsense. I expect you to be on good behavior tomorrow when Penelope comes," Mrs. Brekenridge warned.

Bob and Nancy waited on the station platform for the train to arrive, both attempting to look pleasant, but anticipating the worst.

"What's the gang going to say when we take her out of the moth balls and introduce her? Boy, I can see my summer's going to be a drag right now. How can you even talk to anybody like that? She's so square she won't even know the time of day," Bob grumbled, looking at his watch impatiently.

"There's the train now," Nancy said unenthusiastically.

Penelope was the third passenger to disembark from the train, a slim, blond girl carrying a single suitcase. She wore a simple blouse and skirt and no lipstick. Far from the arrogant manner expected, she seemed shy and very frightened.

"That's her!" Bob cried and hurried over to the pathetic figure.

"Aren't you Penelope?" he asked.

"Yes," she replied. "I guess you must be Bob."

Although Penelope was reserved, there was something about her Bob liked immediately. Perhaps her silvery hair that hung to her shoulders without a curl or wave, or the lost, little girl expression in her wide greenish-blue eyes. He wasn't sure, but he took her suitcase and guided her over to the car.

"Hi. I'm Nancy," she said matter-of-factly.

"Hello," Penelope returned cautiously.

Nancy's reaction to her pedigreed Bostonian cousin was different from the one she expected, also. She found herself smiling and chatting easily as they drove home.

"Don't let the kids throw you with the bop lingo. You'll catch on and pretty soon you'll be as cool as anybody around," Nancy assured her.

"Oh, I don't feel too warm," Penelope replied and couldn't understand what she had said that sent Bob and Nancy into gales of laughter.

"No, 'cool' has nothing to do with the temperature," Bob explained. "It means, well, it means the 'greatest'. Gee, I don't know how to define it exactly, but you'll pick it up."

For the next few days, Bob and his sister declined all invitations and tutored Penelope for her debut Saturday night. Penelope was introduced to Dizzy Gillespie, lipstick, all-night bull sessions, the nickname "Penny", and clothes Nancy thought more attractive than Penelope's many white blouses and dark skirts. And Penny was an interested and appreciative pupil. John and Martha Brekenridge winked at each other as Bob and Nancy fussed over her like two mother hens.

At eight o'clock Saturday evening, the invasion of the Brekenridge domain began. Boys and girls arrived singly, in twos and threes, and in crowds.

Penelope was making a definite hit. She was beautiful, she danced well, and everybody flipped over the way she said "cool" with a Bostonian accent. Things were going very smoothly in fact until Dick Heusen arrived. He saw Penny as soon as he walked into the den, as almost every male in the room was gathered around her in a circle.

"Who's the crazy kid causing all the uproar?" he asked Bob.

"Penny, my cousin. She's something, huh?" Bob replied proudly.

"That you don't need to repeat," Dick murmured and made his way toward the crowd.

He asked Penny for the next dance, and the next, and the next. Dick Heusen was the wealthiest, the most good-looking and the most sought after boy in town. Usually Betty Nelson did most of the seeking, and now her eyes were positively glued to him as he looked down at Penny. She had never seen him look at a girl like that before and Penny didn't seem to be minding it in the least.

When Dick paused to get Penny a coke, Betty stepped over to her.

"Visiting for the summer?" she asked.

"No, I've come to live here," Penny answered straight-forwardly.

"Really? It must be difficult for you, accepting the charity of relatives," Betty struck, knowing her blow hit hard as tears welled in Penny's eyes.

"I don't look at it quite that way. Bob and Nancy are like my brother and sister, and in such a relationship there is no charity," Penelope returned with her natural dignity, but realized at any moment she was going to cry.

"It seems that you're the one who needs charity, and badly, Betty," Dick interrupted, having overheard everything. "And you can write me off in your diary—permanently. I'm going to be very busy trying to make Penny forgive me for knowing you," he said with cold anger, and gathered Penny in his arms for the next dance.

Imagine "Touring" ENGLAND for only 10¢

YOU WILL see Piccadilly Circus, London's Times Square, often called the "crossroads of the world."

YOU WILL stop for fish and chips at quaint country inns such as this one.

YOU WILL wander in awe among Stonehenge's ancient and mysterious relics of prehistoric man.

YOU WILL thrill to the dazzling Crown Jewels, now safely stored in the once-infamous Tower of London.

YOU WILL see Buckingham Palace, home of Queen Elizabeth II and the colorful Palace Guards.

YOU WILL visit Westminster, where Parliament meets. From its tower booms, "Big Ben," the most famous clock in the world.

THE AMERICAN GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY wants you to have this exciting "tour" of ENGLAND...plus a FULL-COLOR WALL MAP OF THE WORLD...a Combined $3.00 Value for only 10¢...to introduce you to the Around the World Program

YES, just one dime takes you on a "magic carpet" tour of Merrie England. Without stirring from your home you can explore every nook and cranny of this storied island. You will see the thatch-roofed cottage of Shakespeare's bride, Anne Hathaway . . . the White Cliffs of Dover . . . "the original round table of King Arthur," a circle of thick oak 17 feet across . . . the strange, ancient monuments of Stonehenge. You will ride a double-decker bus through Piccadilly Circus, the Times Square of London . . . visit the bell foundry where our own Liberty Bell was cast . . . and rest in the shade of the greenwood trees of Robin Hood's Sherwood Forest. You will get to know more about England than many tourists who actually visit there in person!

How You "Visit" a Different Land Each Month

THE AMERICAN GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY makes this generous offer to acquaint you with a new kind of home education hobby — an exciting way for young and old to learn about the people and lands of our wonderful world.

Each month you receive a set of full-color photographs and an informative illustrated guidebook album with spaces for mounting the prints. By means of these prints and albums, prepared under the guidance of American Geographical Society experts, you and your family "visit" a different country every month. You go sightseeing in strange cities. In quaint little villages you observe native customs and crafts. An expert on the region spins stories of great battles, national heroes, legends.

Helps You in Later Life, Too!

Here is an educational hobby for the whole family. It will give you a tremendous advantage not only in school but in later life, in a world where other countries are only hours away by air. You also will find this an enjoyable way of planning or re-living trips.
